Formal Charges Filed Against H. M. Kephart

HARRISBURG Sept. 18.—The Kephart charges were filed in the Dauphin county court yesterday. Deputy Attorney General George Hoss Hull accompanied by District Attorney Philip S. Meyer filed the information and then went on to the office of Alderman Winslow where warrants were sworn out charging H. M. Kephart, with misdemeanor in office during his four-year term as state treasurer.

Alleging that Kephart did not keep an accurate and correct account of state funds in the days when he was treasurer, the charges were filed. The records of the Commonwealth show several pages of the information cover many phases of the transactions uncovered by Auditor General Samuel S. Lewis in the special investigation he caused to have made of the treasury accounts.

The attorney general's office forced Kephart to appear before the grand jury last Saturday morning and the grand jury returned a bill of indictment against him. The information charges that on or about October 11, 1920, Kephart caused the following named sums as state treasurer:

From Chester county $535.61 for the account of East Marlborough township, from Chester county $1,516.55 for the account of East Marlborough township, from Potomac county $1,139.22 for the account of Shingle House borough from Fayette county $2,081.25 for the account of Henry Clay township Fayette county $1,038.50 for the account of Menallen township Fayette county $273.75 for the account of Dunbar township Fayette county $2,113.24 for the account of Franklin township Fayette county $735.75 for the account of German township Lackawanna county $5,327.50 for the account of Clark's Summit and Clark's Green townships Carbon county $3,018.76 for the account of Lehigh township Beaver county $1,572.50 for the account of East Vale borough Montgomery county $971.10 for the account of Hatfield and North Gwynedd townships Berks county $2,471.50 for the account of Amity township Berks county $3,561.47 for the account of Douglass township Montgomery county $4,290.97 for the account of Hatfield and North Gwynedd townships, a total of $41,452.08.

The information then charges that Kephart "did then and there wilfully, knowingly, intentionally and corruptly fail, neglect, omit and refuse to keep a correct and accurate account of the said moneys received as aforesaid in that he did not then and there enter a record of the said moneys so received as aforesaid upon the books and accounts of the state treasurer as of right and according to his duty and the laws of the said Commonwealth of Pennsylvania he ought to have done and "That the said Harmon M. Kephart on divers days thereafter continuously and on each and every business day thereafter from the said eleventh of October 1920 until the second day of May 1921 having first received by virtue of his office the state treasurer divers other moneys of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and it then and there being the exclusive official duty of him the said Harmon M. Kephart as state treasurer to keep a correct and accurate account of all moneys so received did then and there in like manner as aforesaid wilfully, knowingly intentionally and corruptly fail, neglect, omit and refuse to keep a correct and accurate account of the said moneys received as aforesaid as of right and according to his duty and the laws of the said Commonwealth of Pennsylvania he ought to have done

Contrary to the form of the act of the General Assembly in such cases made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

CAVE USED AS SANITARIUM

Physician at One Time Placed Sufferers From Tuberculosis in Famous Underground Cavern.

The Mammoth cave of Kentucky is no doubt one of the most wonderful places in the United States. It has been known and visited for years in a superficial manner, but, strange to say, the cave has never yet been fully explored. This fact may give a little idea of the vast proportions.

When Daniel Webster visited it he was inspired to oratory; when Tenney Lind, the Swedish nightingale, visited there, she climbed up into a natural rostrum in a rock-walled auditorium and instinctively burst into song. Relics of the aboriginal inhabitants are still to be seen in the caves and there are crudely hewn logs still lying around from the earliest springs to caves, where the mineral deposit was collected and used in the manufacture of gunpowder required in the war of that year.

Further back in the depths of the cave are stone huts which were inhabited for a considerable time by tubercular patients. These sufferers were placed there by eminent physicians who were desirous of testing the value of the uniform temperature of the cave upon the dread white plague. Some of these patients lived six months without seeing the light of day.

These caves are a little off the beaten track of tourist travel and, while exceedingly interesting, are not so well known as many inferior examples of the stupendous handwork of the Creator.

NOT WHAT MOTHER EXPECTED

Teacher's Message Sent by Little Clarence by No Means the Kind She Looked For.

Clarence recently made his debut as a Sunday school scholar. When he came home his father and mother waited to hear a report of his experience, but Clarence evidently was too much dazed by them to begin.

"Well, dear," said his mother helpfully, "did you say the text?"

"Yes, mother."

"And did you remember the story of the lesson?"

"Yes, mother. I said it all off by heart."

"And did you put your penny in the basket?"

"Yes, mother."

Clarence's mother caught him up and hugged him ecstatically.

"Oh, you little precious!" she exclaimed. "Your teacher must have been so proud! I know she just loved you. She said something to you, didn't she?"

"Yes, mother."

"I know it," with a proud glance at Clarence's father over Clarence's head.

"Come, darling, tell mother what the teacher said to mother's little man."

"She said for me to bring two cents next Sunday."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Composed for Washington.

"Hall Columbia has the honor of having been composed for President Washington. The father of his country was fond of the play and sometimes attended a little rickety theater one of the best available, which had the 'honorable' capacity of 300 persons.

A piece called 'The President's March' was composed by the leader of the orchestra for one of those occasions and it was played on the entrance of the President and his friends. It was afterward slightly altered and given the name of 'Hall Columbia.' On that same night there were lines in the play that referred to America's chief which made the subject of them somewhat restless, for he was modest and not fond of compliments.

COPYRIGHT, THE BELL SYNDICATE, INC.

"No-no!" she cried. "You shall not."

Stepho looked up. "Take the girl away, Tony," he commanded.

But Nadine threatened him off with her knife. Then she turned the blade in another direction and spoke again. "If you do not let Virgil go," she said, "I will kill myself—now."

Stepho knew Nadine—the wild heart of her. "You promise never to see this man again, and to marry Monsieur Boyce, like I wish?"

"I promise nothing—except that I will kill myself if you do not let him go."

Stepho hesitated a moment, craft fighting with anger. Then craft won; he or Tony would stroll up to the Bodepage plantation and make an end of the General and Drace that night.

"All right," he snarled. "He can go. But let him never come back here or—" He drew the back of his dirk across his own throat in a significant gesture. Then with Tony he lifted Drace into his canoe, and the young man, still dazed from the blow, feebly made his way out of the swamp.

When he had passed from sight, Nadine dropped her knife and sank to the ground sobbing. Old Stepho turned savagely upon her.

"You liar! You she-wolf! I would kill you, but I promise you to the man Boyce. An' now there come something that I tell you. In you there is not the blood of Stepho la Vitte. But you never shall know your name. You she-wolf!"

He thrust himself toward her, his fangs gleaming in his men-fish mouth but without flinching she now laughed in his face.

"Oh, you make me so thankful that I am not your child. You hang his face and would murder him? But he will be gone, and if you kill me, it takes no matter. And you think I will stay here and let the man come to marry me? I will—"

He saved her, and Tony ran in to help. She fought with the dirk, but they wrenched it from her hand, held her helpless, dragged her into her room, and she lay for a time on the floor while she heard them fastening her in prison. It was now dark. She got up, went to the window and found that heavy bars had been nailed across it. She lighted her lamp and with a pencil began to write a note to Drace, playing in her hand that she might find some way to send it to him. Little she slept and in the dawn came at the window the stars all of them gone. She heard footsteps near, and she tried to look out to discover who it might be, but she could gaze neither to the right nor the left, so closely she was mowed. She spoke softly louder and then there drew the darkened form of a man, Batoche, an old frogman when once before she had employed.

"If you have a borrow the musketry sword for the day, for time he has broken; but they are still asleep."

"Come closer, and Batoche and listen to me. Take this note to Monsieur Drace, at General Bodepage's house—quick, with no one to see you, and I will give you a diamond when you come back."

"Give me the note, and I be there soon."

She gave him the note, and he disappeared away. She stood at the door, wondering why he had not heard her when she struck about. Once she thought she heard him call Tony. After a long time Tony came, and she heard them together as they went out. Then all was silent.

Sick in mind and body, Drace made his way back to Bethpage. He made himself as presentable as possible before he entered the house; fortunately, the attention of Tyne and the General was at that moment centered on Colonel Josh, who had stopped off to pay them a call—and who showed astonishment when asked to walk out to dinner, though he yielded with astonishing alacrity to the pressure of the General's hand upon his arm. He was busy with a helping of late muskrat greens and hog's jaw, when Tyne inquired:

"And how is dear Lucy?"

"Madam," said Josh, "I am grieved to impart to you a distressful piece of news. She is soon to be married to a man named Spivan."

"Oh, I'm so sorry, Colonel Josh,"

"Madam, it is a calamity. Luke Spivan—"

"What's the matter with him?" the General inquired. "Isn't broke, is he?"

"General, the man has money. But do you know what his calling is? I shall enlighten you, sir. This fellow is a dealer in oysters, the—the excessiveness of the sea, you might say. And not only that, but he deals in crawfish as well, back-crawling crawfish, sir. I offered her my heart and my home. I told her that I would devote my life to her, and from week to week she put me off. But when this fellow Spivan asked her, I understood she accepted him at a jump, sir. And now I advise him to keep out of my way."

"Oysters and crawfish, eh?" said the General, winking at Drace.

"Those were my words, General—not only oysters but crawfish. I would not have believed it if she had not assured me with her own lips, lips that will please pardon my nearness to profanity."

Tyne's sympathy went out to old

Josh, halved him, and with her eyes she begged the General to drop the subject, but it was sweeter to him than any sugar ever grained in his mill.

After dinner they were in the parlor when they saw a vagabond equipage stop at the gate, an old carry-all drawn by a staggering horse, driven by a ragged negro. There was one passenger in the habiliments of a swarallow, topped off with a yellow cotton hat—enough to disguise any man on earth save one, and this man was the exception.

"Tyne, what did I tell you?" cried the General. "I know it as well as I know my name. Now look at him!"

They looked at him, went out into the hall to meet him, Tyne in convenient tennis. The visitor kissed her and shook hands with the men.

"It is not necessary for me to assert that I hold no commission, civil or military," said the vagrant.

"Sit down, sir," commanded the General. And then, surveying him slowly from head to foot. "Will you please state as to whether or not you regard yourself a human being?"

"General," said Tyne, "please don't scold him, for I'm sure he must be hungry."

"My dear, I shall not scold him; but I don't see anything about him that calls for congratulations."

"I don't," said Tyne. "Tomorrow we'll go over and have the parish squire run you off a suit of clothes."

"My dear relatives, I thank you for these little attentions; and as to your question, General Howard, let me say, sir, that my business as to being a human being is somewhat vague. One of the first things I discovered about myself was my little hip. When do we eat?"

Tyne ran out and returned with a piece of frosted cake that looked like a cornucopia of a noble mantle.

"Well, liberty, we are always glad to see you, anyway. It is the unrelenting, it is a man, a spruce, that gives out lines, and when you come with your guided words, you enlighten us. Where have you been anyhow?"

"I've been where or there," said Shottle, gesturing with his cake. "First I went to Memphis, to the races, and gave old skinner Hughes two hundred to a sure card on the horses. Then on Thursday, I followed the hot set to Lexington, with my bank account looking like a spring-riding cart. But why, I mean when nothing can be swift than the approach of poverty? I finally sold my clothes, to a negro peddler and invested my all in lottery tickets. It seemed that I possessed in all of all the figures of the multiplication table, didn't see how I could possibly miss, but I hit it. When I held out for me to win again, he gets to a certain pinnacle of fortune, slips off and spends the rest of his life struggling to get back. When do we eat?"

Long after bedtime Shottle came to Tyne's room.

"Virgil, you know I've got to hit on something of a permanent nature. So the question is, now that I've quit gambling what am I going to do?"

"You'll not go to sleep, I'll tell you of a plan. Mark me! I have observed, along with thousands of others, that nothing slips deeper into rainy-day money than a circus and menagerie. It is known that the poor man of the South and especially the negro, will sell his soul to buy a circus ticket. Now comes my plan, and mind you, I shive to keep it from being too sudden. Attention! You buy a circus, and I'll go along as ringmaster. That is the one thing I am really fitted for. You never saw me crack a whip, did you?"

"Don't believe I ever did."

"All right, you've got something to look forward to. Yes, I'll be the ringmaster, and—"

"And but an elephant on the turn of a card," said Tyne.

"All, one of my own, perhaps, but not one entrusted to me. I am not an owner of elephants. I wouldn't bet a gutter-snipe on a sure thing. Besides, I told you I'd quit gambling—that is, I'm quitting. It isn't wise to expose my constitution to the shock of a sudden change. . . . Well, good night!"

OUTING GARB IS IN PRIME FAVOR

No Abatement in Interest Shown in Clothes for General Daytime Wear.

ADOPTED IN WORLD-WIDE WAY

Paris Competing With London and New York in Turning Out Smartest and Most Appealing Styles.

There is no abatement in the tremendous interest shown in pastime clothes. Women of all ages are selecting them for general daytime wear practically to the exclusion of other types. Even those who have long realized the versatility of clothes of this sort never, in their most sanguine moments, dreamt that they would be adopted in such a world wide way, declares a fashion writer to the New York Tribune.

Paris is competing with London and New York in the making of the smartest and most appealing styles in out-door clothes. When the type of dress is exploited from all angles it always means that the models are pretty and becoming a certain number of women will wear them with little sense of fitness. That is a so-called pastime hat may be worn with a gown to which it is entirely unbecoming. This is also true of shoes.

Plain Colored Sweaters.

We have out outfit from the old standards which govern the selection of footwear. The final blow was dealt with the wholesale adoption of patent leather for low-heeled walking shoes. With the flooding of the market with many excellent cases in dress at one time there always comes a new application of the best of them.

Both sweaters and dresses are made in two or more contrasting colors, that is of silk or wool in a plain color patterned in high relief.

Among the prettiest of the sweaters are those in lavender, brown, and blue. A new model in these shades, which comes down the front like the very old-fashioned coat sweater is long, ending almost to the knees and having sleeves which flare at the bottom. There is a high collar buttoning up about the neck. The sweater itself is lavender and blue and the belt and on the sleeves and the collar are squares of blue in blue. It is bloused by means of an elastic band placed low on the inside.

White Flannel and Serge.

A great demand for a particular type of dress is a wonderful inspiration to designers and manufacturers and an incentive to do their best in this particular line. White there is the greatest diversity of color in the outing costume here as everywhere else, a few colors become the extreme of fashion. In the plain shades brown, gray and white are favorite, while in the brighter hues there are unusual shades of orange, purple, yellow and red. Emphasis is placed on yellow and black used in union.

A complete reaction from black in daytime clothes is manifesting itself in the other extreme, white, for street wear, particularly white with color and on this wave comes white flannel as well as white serge of an extremely soft and fine texture, woven in part of camel hair, which, like I with the wool gives a masculine effect. The kashmir serge of flannel is of the thar actor.

Jeanne Lan-in has been responsible largely for this movement to white, merge and daint with trimmings of embroidery in high colors, a trimming which she always has favored and in which she ever has excelled. One of her models is a white and red ensemble in a brilliant orange red with little daint, a black and a white.

Another interesting model of white serge is of simple design, with slim panels on the bodice and on the skirt. This frock is embroidered in red and black in a Japanese pattern. A great many of Lanin's ensembles are in Russian and Japanese designs. There are charming frocks of white serge done with head embroideries in high colors after Russian motifs. Very often such frocks are in one style with the Russian bodice crossing.

English women have long recognized the desirability of flannel for outdoor drives, hikes and frolics, and this season's is even adopted in a larger way than ever before. Many American women have felt that flannel was not the most practical material.

Mexican Drawn Work.

Few women realize that the Mexican designs are as dainty and likable as properly laundered and that they come in a large variety of styles and weights. It is possible to obtain the creamy white shade in the old out weights. Then there are the stripes, the check and the Scotch tartan plaid, in addition to the heavy or outing weights in both white and fancy checks. Smart costumes consisting of a dress and cape are developed from the lighter weight flannels in both the white and ivory shades and topped with hats of a vivid hue.

Cape de drap and ermine linings are very important factors for the development of pastime clothes. Lanin has made a beautiful model in a shade of ermine and ermine. The blouse is of bright red, while the skirt is green white. The bodice is made to slip on over the head and cut in pointed scallops at the bottom. The sleeves are fitted in like manner. The skirt is made of a narrow strip of the white silk run through medallion slices of complementary composition. The skirt has a platted front panel set in with hemstitching and Mexican drawn work—types of trimming which are very popular just now.

There are also Red and Blue Braid. Another successful Lanin model also is developed in ermine maroon in two colors, but in this instance yellow and white are chosen the blouse being in ermine yellow trimmed with black and the skirt in pure white.

Jean Lanin has been featuring the three-piece suit in his summer collection. In one of Lanin's best models of this suit white serge is the material used and the trimming is red and black. The lining of the jacket and the foundation skirt are of red silk; the blouse is of white ermine georgette.

Anything Goes. "You'll have to entertain the guests, I don't know."

"I have an Irish joke."

"It is fit for mixed company."

"It is fit for mixed company now."

Enormous Hats. One of the enormous hats beneath which the Parisienne hides herself at present has almost the proportions and half the characteristics of a tent. In black, for example, it has a large, crushed crown of satin cloth very high and spreading very wide. Below this spreads a huge expanse of black, half the size of a paragon. And from the tent-like helm hang curtains of beautiful black lace, falling in front almost to the nose and in back all rest to the waist.

Tact. "A woman has to use tact with her husband."

"Yes, for instance, I never ask Bob what luck he had at golf. If it was your turn that question angers him; if it was good he'll tell me without asking."

Forbidden Fruit. Mrs. Granger:—It seems to me your husband gives you everything; he can afford.

Mrs. Spendall:—That's why I feel so wretched, dear. My heart is just set on the things I can't afford.

B. & O. TESTS SHOW BEST IN CAREFUL CROSSING CAMPAIGN

Only Five Per Cent of Automobile Drivers Failed in Precautions.

NOT SO GOOD ELSEWHERE

BALTIMORE, Sept. 18.—The following statement is issued by John T. Broderick, chairman of the safety section of the American Railway Association and superintendent of the safety department of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad.

In connection with the careful crossing campaign, which was started on class one railroads in the United States and Canada on June 1, to continue until September 30 under the direction of the American Railway Association, 52 of the largest railroads of the country made a check of all automobiles passing over the tracks at highway grade crossings, and discovered that 51 per cent of the drivers failed to take any precautions whatever to determine whether or not the way was safe.

The Baltimore & Ohio took part in this check, which was made in connection with the nation-wide careful crossing campaign, and observers reported that only five per cent of the drivers failed to stop, look or listen. This is due, officials of the railroad believe, to the intensive educational campaign the road has been conducting for safety at crossings for three years.

Another significant fact in the observation test was that 61 per cent of the drivers of machines passing over Baltimore & Ohio tracks looked in both directions for the approach of trains. One of the 52 railroads that have reported on the test, 20 per cent looked up and down the tracks before going over them.

The careful crossing campaign is an effort to educate drivers to the necessity of constant vigilance at railroad grade crossings. It was just half over when the check was taken. It was the desire of the section to learn if automobile drivers were really observing the campaign slogan, "cross crossings cautiously."

Instructions were sent out from the association headquarters so that the check should be uniform on all railroads. Two days were set aside and the railroads were asked to make the test at three places on the system where there was comparatively heavy traffic and where accidents were likely to happen when automobile drivers acted carelessly.

In the two days of the test, a little more than 300,000 machines were observed. Cards were furnished to the observers, and they checked off each machine as it passed and noted on the card, the action of the driver.

There were only 6,700 drivers, or about two per cent, who actually obeyed the injunction of the signs at the crossings to "stop." These 6,700 drivers got the best assurance possible: that they would not be struck by a train that might have been approaching.

There are many motorists who forget that a train might approach in either direction, for there were about 62,000, or 20 per cent of the drivers checked who looked only in one direction. This is regarded as a dangerous practice, for at times on double track railroads trains might be, and frequently are, operated in the reverse direction from the usual. On single track roads, of course, operation in both directions on the same track is the usual thing. Real safety, then, would be for the driver to always look in both directions at all crossings.

About the same number, 62,820, looked in both directions before going upon the track. On the Baltimore & Ohio 2,171 drivers out of 3,457 took this precaution.

The large group was the 156,000 motorists who failed absolutely to cast their eyes up and down the tracks in an effort to prevent an accident and it is this class that the railroads desire to reach and urge safer conduct. It is not a difficult task for the motorist to do the same as he does in the city at street intersections where the trolley cars operate. Few motorists approach such intersections without looking, both ways for the approach of a trolley, yet out in the open country they disregard this safety measure.

The speeder also was watched closely, and of the 300,000 motorists observed, 6,400 or nearly nine per cent, were driving their cars 20 miles or more per hour when they passed over the tracks.

"It seems that there has been little snubbing among the students at the Naval Academy."

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "I am afraid a few of the boys are training themselves to become not sea dogs but sea cats."
